To the Freeholders of the Counties of Loudoun and Fauquier.

HAVING declared myself a Candidate for the office of Elector for the District of Loudoun and Fauquier, it may not be improper that I should make known to you, my Fellow-Citizens, the line of conduct I mean to pursue, should I become the object of your choice.

As in making up your decision on this subject, I presume that you will extend your views beyond the personal merits or individual pretensions of the the two Candidates who solicit your suffrages, to the more important consideration of the fitness of those characters proposed to fill the office of President of the United States, I shall forbear to urge any personal claims upon your esteem and good opinion. It may not however, be amiss, in order to repel the force of certain insinuations, made by my opponent, to declare that his publication is the first information or hint which I have received, that a party was forming in this State to vote out of office the present President. If such a party exists any where, except in the imaginations of those who are under the influence of strong political prejudices, I disclaim any connection with it, and can safely appeal to those among you with whom I have the pleasure of being acquainted whether any part of my conduct or deportment in life will justify the ranking me amongst the factious, turbulent and ambitious.

As I never disguise my own sentiments, with a design to sift out those of other people, and as I consider duplicity and dissimulation unjustifiable in all situations, but particularly inexcusable in political concerns, I shall, unequivocally, declare what I conceive to be the true interests of the United States in general, and of Virginia in particular, in respect to the election of a President, which Interests I shall steadily pursue.

In every appointment, but more especially in that of a chief Magistrate of the United States, I conceive that the people ought to select a character friendly to equal liberty & republican principles of government, & that local considerations, though they should not have too much weight, ought not to be disregarded.

Could General WASHINGTON, therefore, be prevailed upon to serve again, I have no hesitation in pledging myself to vote for him as President of the United States, both from a confidence in his integrity and patriotism, and because I consider him as possessing, in the most extensive degree, the confidence and affections of the people of America, and as best calculated to promote the general good of the Union, and those local benefits which it is so much our interest, as Virginians to cherish. I allude to those interests connected with the City of Washington and the River Potomack.

But if (as it is said) the President is determined to retire from public life, it seems agreed on all hands that the contest will be between Mr. JEFFERSON and Mr. ADAMS, in which event I am free to declare my preference of Mr. JEFFERSON.

However favourably I may think of Mr. HENRY, or whatever may be the views of my opponent in holding up, for the first office in the United States, a man that he has hitherto so freely censured, the certain consequence of voting for him in Virginia, would be to divide the southern interest without a chance of electing him, and would be the most effectual means of promoting the election of Mr. ADAMS, as every vote given in Virginia to Mr. HENRY and Mr. ADAMS would be one taken from Mr. JEFFERSON, the only person who is considered as having any chance against Mr. ADAMS. The votes for Mr. JEFFERSON and Mr. ADAMS, would injure the election of the former in half that proportion.

Mr. ADAMS's well known predelection for Monarchy may have endeared him to some few amongst us, but forms, in my mind, an insuperable objection to him, whilst Mr. JEFFERSON's steady and uniform attachment to republican government, constitutes the principal ground of my preference;—nor do I think his merit at all diminished by the circumstance of his having been a friend to the adoption of the Federal Constitution, and a zealous supporter of that Constitution upon its true and genuine principles. In his hands too, I think we can more safely trust the interest of the Potomac than with a northern President. We have been informed, from pretty high authority, that the law for establishing the seat of the general government on that river, was at first obtained by a compromise or, in other words, by an exchange of votes between the Northern and Southern Members. There is little doubt but that a majority of both houses of Congress are unfriendly to the new city; but it is equally certain that a sufficient number could not be got to pass an act for the repeal of the present law in opposition to the qualified negative, which the Constitution vests in the President, and which we may be assured would, by Mr. JEFFERSON, be interposed against such an attempt: but respecting which (to say the least) we have not the same security as to Mr. ADAMS.

As to the person most suitable for the office of Vice-President, I have made up no opinion. I shall endeavour to inform myself respecting the different characters that may be proposed and decide to the best of my judgment. All that I can at present say is, that should I be honoured with your confidence, I shall certainly vote for the present President, if he does not decline serving again. Should he do so, my determination is, with the lights and information I now possess, to vote for Mr. JEFFERSON, and not Mr. ADAMS.

ARMY OF THE RHINE AND MOSELLE.

The Commander in Chief of the Executive Directory.

Head Quarters at Offenburg, 10th Messidor 4th year, June 29, 1796.

Citizen Directors,

I have to give you an account of the new successes, which the army of the Rhine and Moselle has obtained over the enemy since the passage of the Rhine.

The establishment of the bridge, which was compleated on the 17th enabled us, to make the artillery and cavalry pass. Gen. Ferinot went immediately to reconnoitre towards Maclen and Goldscher, in order to ascertain the march of the corps of Conde, which after our passing the Rhine pushed very hard towards Offenburg. General Desaix attacked Vleanuhl; which he carried with the greatest bravery: The loss of the enemy consisted in 200 prisoners; and the loss in killed and wounded was at least equal to that number.

On the 8th, the division of General Ferinot pursued his march against the corps of Conde; he crossed the Shutter and marched towards Houghorst and Langelhaist.

On the same day General Beaupois began his march on the right bank of the Kintzing in order to attack the camp at Wiltstedt: we met the enemy at Gotish, and obliged them to fall back with precipitation to their camp; but when they came out of this village, the regiment of Cuirassiers of Anspach attacked the column with such fury, that they overthrow all what had passed the defiles, and who had not time yet to form, notwithstanding all the efforts made to effect it.

The general of division, Beaupois, received 7 or 8 grievous wounds with the broad-sword, as likewise citizen Dronault, aid-de-camp to general Desaix. Two battalions of the 10th half brigade of light infantry, placed in the head of the village, by a well directed fire, soon put a stop to this attack. Our cavalry soon recovered the moment of disorder they had been thrown into; they in their turn attacked the Cuirassiers with the greatest bravery, drove them into the camp at Wildstadt, and brought back 150 prisoners, and 60 horses. They marched immediately against the camp, from whence the enemy was dislodged, with the loss of one cannon and several caissoons.

The brigade of general Sainte Suzanne marched this day towards Heitzheim and Lingt, the troops behaved with their usual bravery. Enough cannot be said in praise of general Lasalin and Beaupois, and the adjutent. general Decamp. The latter, in crossing the Kintzig, seeing a grenadier ready to drown threw himself into the river, and swimming preserved to the republic, the life of one of her defenders. The chief of brigade, Fouconnet, who was wounded in this affair, has distinguished himself in a particular manner. Two pieces of light artillery got between the enemy at the time the Cuirassiers made the attack, but not a single gunner quitted his piece. The drivers distinguished themselves by the coolness wherewith they remained on their horses, where without the least means of defence, they were exposed to the swords of the enemy, who wounded several of them.

On the 9th, the division of Ferinot marched along the left bank of the Kintzig to get into the road from Offenburg to Friburg, in order to threaten the enemy to cut off their retreat in this point, and to harrass them on the left by threatening Offenburg with an attack.

The rest of the army [illegible] columns for the purpose of attacking the camp at Bilhel, before Offenburg. The first commanded by general Lecombe marched by the road of Wildstadt and was to attack the left of the position in front. Adjutant-general Decamp was to gain the foot of the mountains, in order to turn the right, but before he began to act he was to reconnoitre well on his left, in order to be sure that general Wurmser's army which was known to be on its march, might not interrupt the march. General Sainte Suzanne marched with the third against Urtaffen and Zithem, in order to oppose the troops that came from the Lower Rhine: these three corps were under the command of General Desaix.

The first displayed behind the village of Griessen within cannot shot of the camp of Bissel, which was about fifteen thousand men strong, composed of part of the corps of Conde, of the troops of the circle and some Austrian corps, which formed the cordon of the Rhine.

The second directed its march to Appenwix and was to have established itself behind the right of the camp, after having secured their back: but arriving in the village they found there the van of one of the columns of the army of Wurmser, which came on in the greatest hurry in order to form a junction at Offenburg with the corps of the Upper Rhine. Adjutant General Decamp attacked them with the greatest audacity, and at last repulsed them by a charge of the cavalry made by the 6th regiment of dragoons, and part of the eighth of Chasseurs. The loss of the enemy in killed and wounded, was very considerable; we took from them about 100 horses and 150 prisoners.—Night coming on, we were obliged to postpone the attack till next morning.

The corps of General Sainte Suzanne fell in likewise with the enemy at Urtassen, drove them off with the greatest vigor, and took about 100 prisoners.

Night [illegible] likewise from pursuing his [illegible] and the army remained on the field of battle during the most dreadful weather; the enemy evacuated the camp at Bibel during the night. Seeing that it was impossible for the enemy to form a junction with the corps of Wurmser, General Ferinot, at day break, took possession of Offenburg, and pursued the enemy, who left him two pieces of cannon and some caissoons. Adjutant General Billevenne pursues them in the valley of the Kintzig with the light troops; and the rest of the army under the command of Desaix is marching towards Appenwix and Nilassen, where there will certainly be a serious engagement with the reinforcements coming from the Lower Rhine.

I cannot, citizen Directors, sufficiently praise the bravery of the troops & the general officers who commanded them, in all these attacks made one after another with troops not organized, but who were nothing but detachments, joined by forced marches from the different divisions of the army who were next to send them across the Rhine.

The rapidity of this march, and the several attacks, as the necessary consequences thereof, have prevented the junction of the two armies which the enemy had on the Upper and Lower Rhine; and the want of uniformity, which this must occasion for some days in their operations, promises us new successes.

STATE PAPER.

Declaration of the Empress of Russia

M. De Strove, Charge D'Affairs from Russia, to the Imperial Diet, has made verbally the declaration following:

"Her Majesty, Empress of all the Russias, has surveyed with the greatest attention the sad events of a war, so decisive of the fate of Germany. In applauding the unrelaxed zeal and patriotism displayed by several States of the Empire, in defence of the common cause, she cannot conceal the pain she feels from the languor of many others, and the want of unity every where manifested,

"Being bound and recently by new engagements, most intimately by the head of the Empire, she thinks herself called upon in virtue of their relations, to summon the Princes and States of the Empire, to unite with their chief, and not abandon a coalition which can alone secure, by an honorable peace, the preservation of the Germanic Constitution, the maintenance of which will always be an object of the most lively solicitude to her majesty."

This note is the result of the solicitations of the Court of Vienna, to which her Majesty replied:

"That her troops were ready, in fact, to march; but her majesty thought she should render a more essential service, by making a declaration."

M. de Kalitcheff, ambassador from Russia to Berlin, having, at the desire of the Cabinet of Vienna, made representatives upon the assembling of the combined army; which marched for the banks of the Weser the 16th of the month, his Prussian Majesty replied:

"That this army having no other object than the safety of the North of Germany, the measure, purely defensive, could not give umbrage to any one; more particularly it was done with the most perfect consent of his Britannic majesty; in his quality of Elector of Hanover."

The present fashion among the ladies in London, is said to be a glaring violation of the decorous precept of the satyrist.

LATEST LONDON ACCOUNTS.

By the Ship Iris, arrived at City-Point, the Editor of the Peterſburg Gazette has received London Papers to the 18th of July. The following articles are given in his Paper of Friday laſt.

LONDON, JULY 18.

The ſurrender of Milan, which has hitherto been an obſtacle to the progreſs of the French army of Italy, will now enable it to proſecute its operations. Mantua ſtill holds out, and it is thought, will coſt the French a great many men.

By official communications from the army of the coaſts of the ocean, it appears that peace is about to be reſtored to the diſtracted provinces of the republic, ſo long the ſcene of devaſtation and bloodſhed. The Chouans continue to ſurrender in bodies. Their arms are faithfully delivered up, and the peaſants are returning in tranquility to their homes and to the fields ſo long manured only by their blood.

In the Moniteur of the 11th it is ſtated that another engagement had taken place between Moreau and the Auſtrians, in which the former took 500 priſoners; but that the battle was terminated by a very heavy fall of rain, which prevented both parties from continuing it. This is not mentioned as a vague report, but announced briefly in the manner practiſed by this Journal as the ſubſtance of authentic intelligence, before the official accounts had been made public. From the ſituation of the armies ſince the late engagements, indeed, it is very probable that new actions have taken place.

It was announced, ſome days ago, that the French intended to eſtabliſh a direct communication between the army of the Upper Rhine and that of Italy. Kellerman's army appears to be deſtined to form this junction; and there are accounts which ſtate that in purſuance of that plan, he has marched from the Vale of Aoſta, in order to penetrate through the Valteline and the country of the Griſons, to eſtabliſh himſel in the Lake of Conſtance, and take Tyrol in the rear, with a view of forcing the Imperial army to abandon that country. This end being attained, he will probably extend a chain of poſitions to the right, along the lake of Garda, for the purpoſe of eſtabliſhing a communication with Buonaparte; and to the left towards Swabia, to enable him to join the right wing of Moreau's army.

If we may credit a letter from St. Gall, of the 26th ult. inſerted in the laſt Paris papers, he has already croſſed the country of the Griſons, and made himſelf maſter of Bregentz. It remains to be known, whether the detachments from the Upper Rhine, deſtined to reinforce the army in Tyrol, have reached the Lake of Conſtance early enough to check Kellerman's farther progreſs; and whether the Archduke Charles, who by forced marches is advancing againſt Moreau, will be able to prevent that General from eſtabliſhing himſelf in Swabia.

The French ſeem to have gained a great aſcendency at the court of Conſtantinople; and the Turks and they have lately mingled their joy in celebrating the victories of the French armies in Italy.

Letters from Conſtantinople mention, that the Porte is making exertions to augment its navy; that his Catholic Majeſty has been applied to for the purpoſe of negociating a peace between the Turks and the Knights of Malta; and that the French ambaſſador, in expectation of the aid of the Ottoman power in the Mediterranean, has promiſed to employ his good offices, to accompliſh its wiſhes.

The letters received from Lord Bute by the laſt Corunna mails, contain the agreeable intelligence, that in conſequence of the remonſtrances made by his lordſhip, the Spaniſh government has countermanded the march of the troops who were ordered to proceed to the lines of St. Roch. This circumſtance tends to prove, that the apprehenſions of a miſunderſtanding between our Court and the Madrid, are without foundation.

Yeſterday was received in town a Paris paper (the Journal des Defenſeurs de la Patrie) of the 11th inſtant, which contains an official account of the ſurrender of the Citadel of Milan to the French, on the morning of the 29th of June (being twelve days after the trenches were opened) and of the entry of a diviſion of the Republican army into Leghorn on the preceding day. The garriſon of the Citadel of Milan, which conſiſted of 2,800 men, ſurrendered themſelves priſoners of war, and all the magazines, proviſions, &c. which the fortreſs contained, fell, of courſe, into the hands of the French.

Our ſquadron in the Mediterranean continues to block up the port of Toulon, by which the enemy are ſo completely overawed, that they ſuffer their ſhips to be taken under the protection of their heavieſt batteries.

It was yeſterday rumoured, but on what authority we do not pretend to ſay, that the French, after ſome partial but obſtinate engagements, had penetrated as far as Wetzlar, and that General Kleber's army was on its march to Frankfort.

It was alſo ſtated, that Moreau's troops had been driven back by General Stein, from their advantageous poſition on the Black Mountains to Openau.

The Mountains of Knubis, where the French have eſtabliſhed themſelves is the ſame height which, in the military annals of Guſtavus Adolphus, is known by the name of the Swediſh Lines, becauſe his army was encamped there in the thirty years war. This poſition is highly advantageous, inaſmuch as it affords Moreau eaſy means to ſpread his army all over Swabia. Kehl is four leagues diſtant from this mountain.

FURTHER EUROPEAN INTELLIGENCE.

BOSTON, SEPTEMBER 10.

We ſtop the Preſs, to announce the arrival here, this morning, of Captain Swain, 56 days from Bremen. He brought no papers:—However, by the politeneſs of the Captain we are enabled to ſtate the following intereſting particulars:—That on the 12th of July, about a day's march from Frankfort, a ſevere engagement took place between the French and Auſtrian armies, which ended in the total defeat of the latter, the loſs of 12,000 killed and taken priſoners, together with their baggage, artillery, &c.—That the French immediately puſhed on for Frankfort, and it was ſuppoſed at Bremen, when Capt. Swain ſailed, (July 15) that the French were already in poſſeſſion of that place. This intelligence arrived by expreſs from the Auſtrian army, and was confirmed by the Auſtrian ſoldiers who had eſcaped. It appears, that the French effected this defeat by ſtratagem; having dreſſed a regiment of their troops in Auſtrian uniform the evening preceding the battle, they were made to feign an attack on the French; who retreated—the Auſtrians obſerving the French falling back, came on with all their forces, and when the French had decoyed them far enough to effect their purpoſe, they turned on them, and made a moſt complete victory.

FOR THE GOOD OF NAVIGATION.

The ſubſcriber having been obliged to put into Little Egg Harbour twice while he was trying to weigh the ſloop Hannah, and thinking it but right that ſtrangers going along ſhore, and taken with contrary winds, or the wind upon the ſhore, ſhould be made acquainted with the marks ſet up by Capt. Patrick Dennis, of the Revenue Cutter Vigilent. Upon the North beach, in coming from ſea or going a long ſhore, they muſt not attempt to go over the bar until they bring both beacons in one they will then bear about N. W. then run in keeping them ſo, until they are within the bar, which they will eaſily ſee, by the breaking of the ſea upon it; then keep the South break aboard until they get to the point of Tucker's or South Beach, giving it a ſmall birth. and run in to anchor a-breaſt of Tucker's houſe, and anchor there in about 14 or 16 feet water—They will find upon the bar two and an half fathoms, at low water.
